

Artists invited to apply to create art for future Cowichan District Hospital

Calling artists in and around the Cowichan Valley — this could be the opportunity you've been waiting for!

Island Health is seeking artists to create artwork to be displayed throughout the future Cowichan District Hospital (CDH), currently under construction and slated to open in 2027.

By integrating diverse artistic expressions with top quality medical care, the hospital seeks to reflect the cultural richness and natural beauty of the Cowichan Valley, creating an environment that supports the physical, emotional and spiritual wellbeing of its community members.

We are seeking photography, paintings, graphic art, carvings, digital art, soundscapes, virtual reality, knitting, textiles, weaving, sculptures, prints, and more.

If selected, your work may be featured in key spaces such as the community hall, clinical areas and the Indigenous Gathering Space. It may also be chosen to support a system of wayfinding or included in interpretive exhibits for this vital community resource.

To apply to participate in this unique and exciting opportunity, scan the code below.

Applications open now until June 30, 2025.

Art is medicine.
