Re: Schnitzer Fire and drinking water quality test results

Island Health has reviewed the test-results for drinking water wells within the immediate vicinity of the Schnitzer Steel operation in Cassidy, following a fire at the site on September 10, 2020.

Island Health's Medical Health Officers and Environmental Health team have determined the chemical results are safely within the maximum allowable concentrations set in the Canadian Drinking Water Guidelines.

There are no advisories related to these drinking water wells, or to the broader aquifers in the area, to issue at this time and the water is considered safe for consumption.

Island Health and its partners are developing an ongoing monitoring plan to determine that drinking water within the area remains safe for consumption.
